Customer Reviews

Books three and four in Chris D'Lacey's The Last Dragon Chronicles are The Fire Eternal and Fire Star respectively. I've reviewed the first two separately, but as these two share many of the same problems, I've decided to review them together. The first book, The Fire Within, introduced the major characters and the basic premise of the Last Dragon who died ages ago but whose lost Fire Tear might still play a role in today's world. Connected, somehow, to that dragon (Gawain) are young Lucy Pennykettle and her mother Liz, who makes clay dragons, some of which are animate and have special powers. Their tenant David Rain gets mixed in with the dragon mystery, but mostly he and the others are involved in a plot about squirrels. This book is a bit of an outlier in the series, with very few dragons and a younger target age. The sequel, Icefire, keeps the focus squarely on the dragons. The plot, while still early YA, is more mature and becomes more complicated. We learn that there is a connection between dragons and polar bears and Gawain's fire tear. A new love interest is added via Zanna, who turns out to be more than she first appears. And the book takes a darker turn with a full-fledged villain--Gwilanna--who seeks the fire tear for her own purposes. Gwilanna continues to play a major role in Fire Star, kidnapping Lucy in an attempt to use her somehow in her plans to resurrect the long-dead Gawain. Zanna has also gone missing, disappeared somewhere in the Arctic where she and David had been working (David had returned due to Lucy's abduction).
